
Integrative Health Coaching at the Osher Clinical Center

What is Integrative Health Coaching (IHC)?

Integrative Health Coaching (IHC) helps motivate clients to initiate and maintain positive life changes to achieve their health and wellness goals. It is a collaborative, solution-focused process that concentrates on a client's individual needs.

Who can benefit from Integrative Health Coaching?

Let's face it, the demands on many of us can easily become overwhelming. I hear clients say "I have a hard enough time just getting through the day, never mind taking time to exercise, learn how to eat healthy and manage my stress". Unfortunately, many people use all of their resources to "get through the day", rather than get the most out of it.

Integrative Health Coaching works with clients to help with stress management and adaptation, goal setting to achieve health and optimal well being and developing strategies for living a more mindful life that effectively balances the demands of work, family and leisure.

Maybe you need help to simply structure your day or perhaps you would like to launch a new business and not lose focus on self-care. Meredith works with clients who are experiencing difficulties because of disorganization, stress or pain, and a variety of issues that disrupt work-life balance. Her practice encompasses a wide range of techniques to help optimize her clients ability to function and live a most fulfilling life.

What should I expect from an Integrative Health Coaching Session?

During the initial 60 minute IHC consultation, we'll talk and assess your needs and set up a plan that includes timelines, long and short term goals and strategies for success. Follow up sessions are generally 30 minutes in length with homework on a daily/ weekly basis. We can work at your pace, and I will help guide you through achievable success benchmarks.
